To Mr. Francisco Andrade

Letterhead is the header at the top of (stationary) stationery. The header usually consists of the name and address, as well as a company logo or design, and sometimes a background pattern. The term "letterhead" is often used to refer to whole sheets printed with such a header.

Many companies and individuals prefer to create letterhead templates in word processing applications or other software applications. These templates generally include the same information as pre-printed stationary but at no additional cost. The letterhead can then be printed on stationary (or plain paper) as needed with a local printer or sent electronically. The header usually consists of a name and address, as well as a company logo or design, and sometimes a background pattern. The term "letterhead" is often used to refer to whole sheets printed with such a header.

Many companies and individuals prefer to create letterhead templates in word processing applications or other software applications.

Regards,

Teddy Yu
Interior Design
Keithston and Partners